LOGLINE

In the Kingdom of Italy, sovereignty isn’t inherited—it must be earned. Susy, a descendant of the Augustus dynasty, competes in the Roman Fights—a merit-based competition open to all—to become head of Foreign Affairs in a tri-monarch direct democracy that combats nepotism via rigorous logical, psychological, and physical evaluations. Her exceptional skills stem from body control and emotion channeling, developed through meditation, psychiatric help, and her apathetic twin Ale’s support. Overcoming stress and fear of public scrutiny, she endures grueling logic exams and high-pressure psychological tests during the pre-selection process in order to enter the brutal and strenuous arena fights.
